A: You need to make sure that both the laptops can access internet via ethernet port. The details of how you do it are beyond the scope of this site. However, if you've made sure that both your laptop are able to access the internet, the next step is to share the internet connection on your LAN. You will need to edit the networking configuration on the laptops. You should refer to the manual to determine the exact location of the file. You can either use network-manager or open the network configuration and share the connection by changing the option as follows. After this is done, you will need to make the configurations on the network files. You can edit /etc/resolv.conf. It should be as follows In short, you need to add the following lines to the /etc/resolv.conf file. Search localhost nameserver 127.0.0.1 nameserver 192.168.178.1 The rest is exactly the same as the /etc/network/interfaces file. For further details, refer to the network configuration file document. Blizzard's strategy of restricting player access to optional content has been showing signs of frailty lately, and it's likely that the studio is considering an overhaul of its entire approach to in-game progression. To this point, it's been consistently criticized for being lazy and rigid, but Blizzard has the option of trying something different, and the company recently began testing a new, optional structure for its games, which seems to be a highly considered attempt to make the game more flexible and responsive. The new structure is part of an ongoing change in Blizzard's approach to making sure that characters in Overwatch don't level up at the same pace as characters in other games. This was brought into clearer focus in an interview that occurred last week between Blizzard boss Mike Morhaime and IGN. During the interview, Morhaime explained that he felt that players were taking the idea of progression in Overwatch "very seriously," and that they were taking the game very seriously, which indicates that the studio is trying to figure out how to make it happen more fluidly. Morhaime then explained that the studio is trying to make sure that players don't feel like they're getting left behind, and that they're trying to make sure that the 82157476af
